Here, the bustling fair, where joy fills the air,
There stands a humble shop, hidden from the glare.
Its sign reads "Happiness for sale," so clear,
But alas, no one seems to stop by near.

A gentle breeze whispers secrets untold,
As the curious wander but fail to behold,
The treasures within that little shop's door,
Where happiness dwells, yearning to soar.

Behind the window, colors glisten and shine,
With warmth and contentment, intertwined.
The shelves are adorned with blissful delight,
Yet unnoticed, untouched, they remain out of sight.

Oh, passerby, won't you take a moment's pause?
Enter this refuge from life's relentless claws.
For within these walls, magic lies in wait,
Like a soothing balm for hearts that ache.

The keeper, with eyes as comforting as morn,

Waits patiently with a smile, never worn.

Whispering softly, "Come, discover true peace,

Embrace the happiness that longs to release."

In jars of laughter, and vials of serene,

Are the secrets to conquer life's unforeseen.

Each jar holds dreams and moments of cheer,

All yours, if only you'd venture near.

Come, weary souls, let your worries dissolve,

In the refuge that this humble shop absolves.

Find solace, find hope, and rediscover your smile,

Amidst the shelves of happiness, mile after mile.

For this shop's treasures, they can't be bought,

But their value is beyond any earthly thought.
